The first Christian communities felt that their faith was not part of a particular cultural tradition, differing from one people to another, but belonged instead to the realm of truth, which concerns everyone equally. Honestly, would you even come up with this profoundly convoluted ad hoc justification if the science were different? Hence our gratitude for the testimonies about the life of the Church in different parts of the world which emerged from the various interventions on the floor. I actually laughed out loud 3 times while reading. If you prefer your fiction a little deeper and with a more literary bent then you will probably be disappointed. There is no doubt that, if one had looked into their genes, the signs of adaptations would have been manifest. My wife misses out too and our brief time together before we both fall asleep is precious.
