The heart of Iran is a mountainous plateau, much of which consists of uninhabitable desert, surrounded by the waters of the Caspian Sea to the north and the Persian Gulf to the south, by plains to the southwest and deserts to the east. However, we should not forget that Iran needs a sufficient military power. The foreign policy of Arab states hinges excessively on the idea of opposing Iran based on their two main interests: economic and politics.

He is a graduate of Columbia University. Saudi Arabia, which was previously criticized by Iran because of its control over the main Islamic holy cities of Mecca and Medina and also because of its perceived reliance on the United States for security, also participated in the meeting. Iraqi invasion of Iran increased Saudi concerns over stability in the region, hence their financial support to Iraq regardless of the "not-so-warm" relations between Baathist Iraq and Conservative Saudi Arabia.

The FP agenda is full of important items; international negotiations, economic essence, even if war does break out between Iran and Israel – as it has in some of these analogous situations – these two conflicting countries are likely to remain the dominant players in the region for some time to come.
