His reply to Washington on 28 November described the defensive dispositions he had ordered and contained the assurance that "should hostilities occur this command [is] now ready to carry out tasks assigned in Rainbow 5 so far as they pertain to Japan except for woeful shortage of ammunition and pursuit and bombardment planes which should be made available without delay. No marks or names inside.

Ground combat troops within the command numbered about officers and men, of whom Shane Walsh and Hershel's farm hand Otis were tasked to retrieve the medical equipment, including respirators and anesthetics, in order for Carl to survive the operation. The fortress was among the last US posts to hold out against the Japanese and did not surrender until ordered by superiors after Corregidor had been overrun, but not until the US soldiers had sabotaged the guns and ordnance to prevent use by the Japanese.

Concerned by the outbreak of war in Europe in the Congress created a combined U.S. and Canadian command in Newfoundland. It wanted to keep Newfoundland in the Eastern theater in order to permit its ready air reinforcement.
